Kazakhstan:

Preparing for Nuclear Warhead Transfer preparations for SS-18 missile shipments have resumed at Zhalghyztobe, the site of the other SS-18 complex in Kazakhstan, after an 18-month hiatus. Limited warhead storage capacity at both sites makes such warhead transfers a necessary precursor to further missile deactivations.

Russia and Kazakhstan are still negotiating details, including the amount of Moscow's compensation to Almaty, of an agreement for the withdrawal of all nuclear weapons from Kazakhstan by the end of 1995. If the talks stall, the train could remain at Imeni Gastello or return to Russia without any warheads.
